MACROECONOMIC OVERVIEW

Morgan Stanley: Large cap growth equities advanced quarter to date. Information Technology and Communication Services outperformed, while Real Estate and Consumer Staples underperformed the benchmark.

Wellington: US equities surged in the third quarter, registering a sizable return year to date. Technology and small-cap stocks realized significant gains, and growth stocks outpaced their value counterparts by a wide margin. Lower trade policy uncertainty, robust economic growth, and much stronger-than-anticipated second-quarter corporate earnings fueled the equity rally despite concerns about inflation, tariffs, and a cooling labor market. Gross domestic product (GDP) grew at a 3.8% annualized pace in the second quarter, thanks to robust consumer spending, and the Atlanta Federal Reserve's (Fed) GDP tracker estimates that GDP will expand 3.8% in the third quarter, markedly higher than a previous estimate of 3.3%. Ongoing signs of a weakening labor market bolstered expectations that the Fed will continue to lower interest rates following a 25 basis points cut in September. However, the unusual dynamic of strong economic growth, a weakening labor market, and persistently elevated inflation complicates the Fed's calculus for additional monetary easing, with dot plot projections showing a wide dispersion in policymakers' expectations for interest rates in 2025 and 2026. The federal government shut down after Republicans and Democrats failed to agree on a short-term deal to keep the government funded.

FUND OVERVIEW

Morgan Stanley: Transamerica Large Growth outperformed due to favorable stock selection. Outperformance has been driven by favorable stock selection in Communication Services and Consumer Discretionary. Top relative contributors included: AppLovin (4.97% as of 9/30/2025), Roblox (3.60%), and IonQ (2.52%). AppLovin, which is an advertising technology platform primarily focused on mobile gaming advertising and ecommerce advertising, was the top contributor. Its software solutions provide tools for developers to automate and optimize the advertising and monetization of their apps. The firm believes the company benefits from efficient scale related competitive advantages, and can be a beneficiary of the continued secular growth in mobile applications and ecommerce. It shares advanced this quarter on strong results that beat consensus estimates, and a healthy outlook reiterating expectations for strong margins and ad revenue growth. Investor enthusiasm and sentiment remained very positive for AI and data-driven advertising companies more generally as well. Conversely, stock selection in Industrials and sector positioning in Financials detracted most from relative performance. Top relative detractors included Strategy (2.46%), CrowdStrike (0.00%), and MercadoLibre (2.24%). Top detractor Strategy is a business intelligence and data analytics software provider and bitcoin development company. The company has been using the cash generated from its software business, along with capital market activities i.e. raising both convertible debt and equity – to purchase bitcoin. After several quarters of very strong stock appreciation, its shares pulled back this quarter. Morgan Stanley attributes the underperformance to broader volatility in bitcoin prices and in the premium at which the company's shares trade relative to its underlying holdings.

Wellington: Wellington's sleeve of the Transamerica Large Growth fund underperformed its benchmark, the Russell 1000® Growth Index during the quarter. Security selection was the primary driver of relative underperformance. Weak selection in consumer discretionary, health care, and communication services detracted from relative performance, but was partially offset by strong selection in information technology, industrials, and financials. Sector allocation, a residual of the fund's bottom-up stock selection process, also detracted from relative performance. Overweights to financials and materials and an underweight to information technology detracted from relative returns. At the end of the period, the portfolio was most overweight to communication services, financials, and materials and most underweight to health care, consumer discretionary, and consumer staples relative to the benchmark.

OUTLOOK

Morgan Stanley: The investment team believes having a market outlook can be an anchor. The team focuses on assessing company prospects over a five year horizon, and owning a portfolio of unique companies whose market value they believe can increase significantly for underlying fundamental reasons.

Wellington: The third quarter of 2025 unfolded against a backdrop of moderating inflation, resilient labor markets, and cautious optimism in equity markets. Driven by largely supportive earnings results, the market proceeded with an upward bias in the majority of the summer weeks, ending the quarter on a similarly strong note after the FOMC delivered its first rate cut of the year. This move, while widely anticipated, underscored the Fed's balancing act between supporting growth and guarding against potential inflationary pressures from ongoing trade and fiscal policies. During the quarter, performance was driven by Communication Services, Consumer Discretionary, and Information Technology, with the latter continuing to be driven by market optimism given the strong and accelerating AI investment cycle. However, policy uncertainty persisted, with the Trump Administration advancing additional trade measures and regulatory changes at a rapid pace. As it has done all year, The White House continuously interjected itself into the daily flow of financial markets, particularly within Healthcare and Information Technology, and has served as a parallel and almost equal factor to consider alongside individual company fundamentals. Of note has been the continued resilience of the U.S. consumer. Solid wage growth, healthy household balance sheets, and sustained discretionary spending have provided a stabilizing force for the economy, even amid policy and geopolitical uncertainty. That said, Wellington Management Company LLP (Wellington) is mindful of possible emerging headwinds, including increased servicing of student debt and an increasingly weaker labor market outlook, especially in the younger cohorts of the population.
