MACROECONOMIC OVERVIEW

After advancing over 20% in both 2023 and 2024, U.S. equities as measured by the S&P 500® Index reversed course and posted a loss in the first quarter of 2025. The culprit? Tariffs. While not fully implemented by the end of Q1, market participants were increasingly coming to terms with the likelihood that tariffs were coming, and as a result economic growth was likely to slow and inflation, which the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) had been working to tame since 2022, was likely to rise. In response to the unfolding policy uncertainty, the S&P 500® Index declined, returning -4.27% in the first quarter. Previously high-flying U.S. large cap growth stocks and more economically sensitive small cap stocks were even weaker. Fixed income markets held up throughout most of Q1 as interest rates trended lower and credit spreads widened slightly from historically tight levels. Near the end of the quarter, however, as tariff rhetoric intensified, volatility began to pick up in the bond market. The Fed held its last meeting of the quarter in late-March, and despite rising market volatility, Chairman Powell and company held pat and left the fed funds rate unchanged. However, in releasing its quarterly Summary of Economic Projections, the Fed downgraded its view of gross domestic product (GDP) growth for calendar year 2025 to 1.7%, from 2.1%, and raised expectations of Personal Consumption Expenditures Core Inflation to 2.8%, from 2.5%.

FUND OVERVIEW

Transamerica Asset Allocation Intermediate Horizon invests approximately 50% in equity funds and 50% in fixed income funds. The portfolio is rebalanced based on how much the underlying holdings drift from the strategic target. This is done to both maintain the target allocations and to redeploy assets incrementally from outperforming holdings into those that have been weaker in an effort to continually buy low and sell high. The fund's equity and fixed income funds had mixed results in the first quarter of 2025. The best-performing non-money market fixed income fund in the quarter was Transamerica Inflation Opportunities fund, which carried a target weight of 11.8% and returned 3.29%, as its higher duration was rewarded when interest rates dropped. The top-performing equity fund was Transamerica International Equity fund, as overseas equities outperformed domestic equities. It carried a target weight of 12% and returned 9.73%. Transamerica Large Growth, with a target weight of 13%, returned -10.80% and was the weakest equity fund in the quarter due to weak stock selection decisions. Transamerica High Yield, which carried a target weight of 6% and returned 0.28%, was the weakest fixed income fund during the first quarter of 2025 as credit spreads widened.

OUTLOOK

Given rising uncertainty on tariffs and the potential negative impacts on economic growth and inflation, TAM now believes U.S. economic growth is likely to slow in the year ahead, though remain positive. TAM also now sees core inflation rates as more probable to rise than decline. When netting out the Federal Reserve's dual mandate of maximizing employment and fighting inflation, TAM sees Chair Jerome Powell and his colleagues more likely to lean toward preventing economic contraction, therefore resulting in lower interest rates across the yield curve as the year moves forward. The overall tariff environment is likely to remain fluid, with the potential for breaking information at any time, and therefore continuing to add volatility to the markets. Upside catalysts for stocks between now and year-end should still include tax legislation, deregulation, and a lower interest rate environment, though for at least the upcoming few months, these developments will likely take a back seat to ongoing tariff drama.

Asset allocation, like many investment strategies, offers no guarantee of positive returns, and mutual funds are subject to market risk, including loss of principal. Global/international stock funds and specialty/sector funds are subject to additional market risks. Fees associated with a fund-of-funds may be higher than with other funds. An investment in the fund is subject to the risks associated with the underlying funds including fixed income investing which is subject to credit risk, inflation risk, and interest rate risk. Investment in small- and medium-sized companies present additional risks such as increased volatility because their earnings are less predictable, their share price more volatile, and their securities less liquid than larger or more established companies.

Shares may be sold (or "redeemed") on any day the New York Stock Exchange is open for business. Proceeds from the redemption of shares will usually be sent to the redeeming shareholder within two business days after receipt in good order of a request for redemption. However, Transamerica Funds has the right to take up to seven days to pay redemption proceeds, and may postpone payment under certain circumstances, as authorized by law.

Mutual funds are subject to market risk, including loss of principal. Past performance is not indicative of future results.
