MACROECONOMIC OVERVIEW

The government shutdown brought heightened uncertainty around the economic backdrop in October and November, particularly with the delay of most economic releases. Nonetheless, data released during the quarter eventually painted a benign picture for the US economy. They showed US Gross domestic product (GDP) grew 4.3% in the third quarter after expanding 3.8% in the second quarter. Inflation cooled between September and November, with the consumer price index dropping from 3.0% to 2.7%, respectively, on a year-over-year basis. Meanwhile, the labor market continued to soften. The economy added 64,000 jobs in November but lost 105,000 jobs in October. At its December meeting, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) reduced its benchmark fed-funds rate by 25 basis points (bps) to a range of 3.50% to 3.75%. That marked its third-consecutive meeting rate cut. The FOMC increased its growth forecast for 2026 and signaled just one more rate cut over the next year, implying that further softening of labor market data would likely be a prerequisite to further easing. The U.S. Treasury yield curve steepened during the fourth quarter. The two-year U.S. Treasury yield fell by 13 bps, consistent with the ongoing decline in monetary policy rates. Despite this easing in Fed policy, continued strength in economic data alongside growing budget deficits globally drove long-dated yields modestly higher during the quarter, with the rate on the 30-year Treasury climbing by 11 bps. The Bloomberg US Aggregate Index returned 1.10% in the quarter. Positive returns were supported by both a modest decline in index yields and a tightening in the average option-adjusted spread (OAS). The index yield to worst declined 5 bps from 4.37% to 4.32% and the option-adjusted spread narrowed 1 bp to 27 bps, near its tightest level on record.

FUND OVERVIEW

Transamerica Bond performance relative to the Bloomberg US Aggregate Index benefited from the overweight to credit in the quarter given the additional yield generated by these securities relative to the benchmark. However, credit spread changes that occurred over the quarter detracted from relative returns. Yield curve factors were a negligible detractor. Selection within investment grade corporate credit was the largest contributor to relative returns, followed by the ex-index allocation to high yield corporate credit and the underweight to government securities. Selection within government securities was the largest detractor to relative returns. Over the quarter, the portfolio held longer-duration securities in governments relative to the benchmark's duration profile for the sector. This positioning negatively impacted relative performance given the rise in rates at the long end of the curve over the quarter. The underweight to agency residential mortgage-backed securities (agency RMBS) also detracted. Within corporate credit, the largest contributors to relative returns were selection within consumer non-cyclicals, technology and consumer cyclicals. Overweight allocations to technology, communications and insurance detracted.

OUTLOOK

The broad trends continue to support our economic "cooling" theme and lend credence to the Fed's pivot to the resumption of interest-rate cuts. The labor market continues to exhibit a slow bleed of low hiring and low firing, which has seen the unemployment rate tick slowly higher. At the same time, various economic indicators continue to show signs of robust economic activity, keeping spreads near their tightest levels. Given the persistence of risks to the economic outlook and elevated valuations, the sub-adviser maintains a cautious risk stance and will continue to manage exposure alongside the evolving outlook.
