MACROECONOMIC OVERVIEW

Systematic: The first quarter of 2025 was a difficult one for the stock market, as investors dealt with resurgent inflation and a volatile political economy. The President's efforts to reshape both the scope and scale of the Federal bureaucracy and to re-domesticate significant portions of the global economy tested investors' mettle, and the experience proved once again that financial markets do not like uncertainty. The Administration ramped its protectionist rhetoric over the course of the period, starting with Canada and Mexico, moving to the auto sector and other industries, and culminating with the imposition of an aggressive series of reciprocal tariffs announced after quarter end. Equities sold off sharply into, and immediately following, the announcement of this wide-sweeping, severe tariff regime.

TSW:The first quarter witnessed a meaningful divergence from the prior year. Specifically, 2024 could be characterized as one of the most extreme periods in market history for momentum, propelling more expensive cohorts of stocks higher, while penalizing cheaper cohorts. The first quarter, however, witnessed a reprieve from this momentum-driven market, partially driven by tariff and other policy-related initiatives that have created a higher degree of uncertainty in U.S. markets. It is relevant to highlight that the market faced a high degree of fragility going into the new year as the U.S. market sat above or near record valuations, driven predominantly by multiple expansion over the past couple of years. For the quarter, the U.S. Dollar weakened with international markets outperforming U.S. markets, and value outperforming growth across the U.S. and other geographies. The heightened uncertainty created downward pressure on interest rates. All eyes continue to be on tariff policy and related geopolitical tensions.

FUND OVERVIEW

Systematic: The small cap sleeve of the Fund moderately underperformed the Russell 2000® Value Index during the first quarter, largely a function of unfavorable sector allocation. Stock selection added to returns against the benchmark, but not enough to offset the negative allocation effect. The portfolio's overweight to Information Technology and underweights to the Utilities and Financials sectors were key detractors in the quarter. Elsewhere, none of the economic sectors saw a meaningfully positive allocation effect in the period. Stock selection was additive to relative performance, driven by strong outperformance within the Health Care and Energy sectors. Stock selection in the Industrials and Financials sectors limited total returns compared to the benchmarkThe first quarter witnessed a meaningful divergence from the prior year. TSW: Transamerica Small-Mid Cap Value composite outperformed the Russell Midcap® Value Index (Total Return-Net), notably benefitting from the momentum reprieve following the historic 2024 period. Many of the stocks that were laggards in the prior year were some of the more notable outperformers for the portfolio in the quarter. From an attribution perspective, Industrials and Consumer Discretionary were the primary contributors. In Industrials, TSW's underweight to the sector and positive stock selection drove relative returns, led by its position in a miliary shipbuilder. Within Consumer Discretionary, TSW's underweight to the retail and airlines sectors, and position in an aftermarket auto parts distributor, were the primary sources of return. The most significant detractors were Energy and Real Estate. Within Energy, the portfolio was impacted by an underweight allocation to natural gas, and position in an offshore oil drilling contractor. In Real Estate, its underweight allocation was the sole driver of underperformance.

OUTLOOK

Systematic: Systematic is closely watching the world's response to the reciprocal tariffs announced by President Trump. Inflation risks have risen due to the tariffs themselves, as well as any resource scarcity that may bubble up as manufactures re-domesticate. Meanwhile, the global economy has also likely been experiencing demand destruction amid the uncertainty as companies await policy clarity. The risks posed by the stock market's swoon itself are yet another concern, as areas of the economy could see financial distress as stock markets tumble. Amid the uncertainty and market volatility, Systematic continues to emphasize quality and attractive valuation in its investment decisions. Its portfolio companies, offering sustainable free cash flow, strong balance sheets, and robust debt coverage, are expected to provide a relative margin of safety amid the tumult.

TSW: Despite the recent market drawdown for many U.S. equity asset classes, we continue to live in what TSW believes to be one of the largest speculative tops in market history with broad market multiples near all-time highs, driven by multiple expansion as opposed to fundamentals. Examples of excess are abundant. Coincidentally, the time horizon focus of the marketplace is, in TSW's view, as short-term as the firm can ever remember with the market excessively extrapolating any short-term weakness or strength into perpetuity, creating drastic changes in valuation multiples. In TSW's view, this backdrop, combined with a high degree of uncertainty related to ongoing tariff discussions and other geo-political headwinds, creates a fragile environment, comparable to what was witnessed in 2000 and 2007. As value investors, TSW embraces uncertainty, particularly as markets tend to be less efficient in the short-term, while generally more efficient over longer time periods. TSW believes the current environment to be one of the best times in history to take advantage of market dislocation with a disciplined and patient approach to value investing.
